MARKET INTELLIGENCE

Indonesia remains one of Asia Pacific's key energy markets, supported by rising domestic energy demand, energy security priorities, and the government's ambition to strengthen energy resilience and self-sufficiency. As the country works toward its 2030 target of 1 million barrels of oil per day and 12 bscfd of gas, opportunities are expected to continue across the oil and gas sector, particularly in exploration, production, gas development and supporting infrastructure.

EICDataStream is tracking close to 500 projects across Indonesia's energy sector, with an estimated CAPEX of US$335 billion up to 2032. Alongside Indonesia's target to reach net-zero emissions by 2060, this creates further opportunities in decarbonisation and energy transition sectors, including carbon capture, renewables, lower-carbon fuels and grid development. Together, these developments position Indonesia as a major long-term opportunity market, where energy security, domestic resource development and decarbonisation are expected to drive investment through the next decade.
