Road to COP26: The Race to NetZero

Wood House Glasgow

As the demand for energy grows and the development of a low carbon economy accelerates internationally, there is an increasing need for the global transition to clean power to be at least four times faster than it is at present. As businesses recognise the urgency to act on climate change, with many organisations already committed to helping to accelerate the transition to a net zero economy, there is a unique opportunity for the energy sector to forge ahead towards the 2050 target.

This session will focus on how the energy sector is evolving to play a leading role to a carbon neutral future, providing the solutions for our net zero ambitions, elevating existing energy systems to one that is cleaner and more sustainable, bringing new ways of thinking to address the challenge of climate change and how organisations are turning carbon ambition into carbon action.

The North Sea: An Area in Transition

Wood House Glasgow

On 7th October 1970 the future of energy in the UK changed forever. The discovery of the Forties Field, and its successful development, drove the northeast of Scotland - and with it the UK- into the spotlight of a new energy revolution. Today we are facing another distinctive challenge, in the form of reducing our carbon footprint to net zero by 2050 or sooner. Once again, the North Sea will play a pivotal role as the energy transition takes shape. Engineering innovation, investment opportunities, and support for the UK supply chain will all be key. The challenges faced, knowledge gained, and skill sets acquired over the past 50+ years places the North Sea offshore industry in pole position to lead the way in energy transition both nationally and globally. In the session we will discuss future sustainable energy plans focussing on the North Sea region.
